Dear Assistant Director Lyons,

“The greatness of an institution can be measured by the strength of its internal investigations.”

-Robert S. Mueller, III

On February 10, 2011, February 16, 2011, and February 27, 2011, I wrote to your Unit Chief Sandra Bungo regarding a verified 137-page complaint that I filed on December 13, 2010 with OIG regarding misconduct at the FBI.

OIG advised me that it forwarded the complaint to your Internal Investigations Section, and I merely sought to ask UC Bungo about status. She has not responded.

The complaint I filed (a copy is enclosed) alleges nine counts of misconduct against five employees of the FBI for their falsification of investigative records and other misconduct. The complaint is supported with documentary evidence from the FBI's own files. The complaint raises important issues implicating the FBI's "core values," especially that of Integrity.

Further, the complaint shows violations of the Merit System and the FBI's own policies by a component of the FBI's Security Division. In addition, the complaint exposes failures in the FBI's system of discipline, including deficiencies that were supposed to have been rectified years ago after the famous Bell report on the FBI's Office of Professional Responsibility.

When you have a moment, could you please ask Unit Chief Bungo to let me know where we stand?

Sincerely,
