Ms. McDaniel,

You obviously have a hard time seeing all the shades of gray in the world, and you also have difficulty with intellectual discomfort.

In any case, you must be aware that emailing someone a veiled threat, or even an expressed hope or desire, for the person's 4 year-old daughter to be drugged and raped, is a crime. If you keep emailing me, I will file a police report and also shame you online, as I indicated.

Don't contact me again.

Counselor,

I'm surprised by your response, for several reasons.

First, you seem to be conflating your zealous advocacy, which I've got no problem with, with your public, published sentiment that you are "jealous" of your rapist-client's dating "success" – which any sane person would find repugnant. Those two things are not the same and most lawyers are capable of effectively representing their clients without demeaning themselves. It is not too late to learn that lesson.

That said, I am glad to hear that the jurors in the Doe case said you did a great job. I'm sure that your client will be heartened by the glowing compliments you received from the jurors as he pays a substantial civil judgment following their verdict finding him liable for multiple sexual assaults.

Second, I'm surprised by your statement that you will acknowledge me on your Wall of Shame. I would welcome such recognition! To be shamed by someone who clearly feels none themselves, in response to my criticism of your deeply concerning comments would be gratifying. I would only ask that you include our entire email exchange – including this reply – when you acknowledge me on that Wall of Shame – after all, that is what an intellectually honest person would do, right counselor?

Third, I'm taken aback by your statement that you will file a police report in response to my email. Of course, nothing in my email can reasonably be construed as a criminal threat – any police report you file would be baseless. Frankly, it amounts to threatening me with legal process in response to valid criticism of your disturbing statements. I do genuinely wonder if the state bar would be interested in these threats, or the false police report you are apparently contemplating filing – I expect they are already taking interest in your blogging and commentary about a case you are actively litigating.

Please take your empty threats elsewhere. It's not a good look for you.

Mary McDaniel

Dear Ms. McDaniel,

Despite the result of the Doe trial and despite the recent press coverage on my personal website, I had gotten zero hate emails about the case until yours. The jurors even said I did a great job and that I was extremely conscientious and respectful of the plaintiffs. I have been nothing but polite yet firm with everyone here, and I am only doing my job as defense counsel— I don't deserve to be harassed like this, complete with references to my 4 year-old daughter being raped. If you persist in sending these emails, I will simply add you to my Hall of Shame, and/or file a police report. Please consider that moving forward.

Thanks,

Hey there Andy!

Just read how you admire lil' Dom Foppoli's "dating" record. I'll be sure to look up Jennifer when she turns 18 and school her on what a gross little man her daddy is. You may think differently if someone drugged your little girl and raped her too. Then again, I think not, given your admiration for the rapist himself. Super creepy, boy attorney!
